The case of Tim Sukits is a curious one indeed. Raised in the heartland of Indiana on Woodstock era vinyl, garage door muffled grunge, and copious amounts of '90s to aughts alt-pop/rock from mellow to metal, he began breaking out loosely interpreted covers and an eclectic mix of originals for campfire crowds and cornfield jams.

Minoring in guitar performance at Ball State, he was first exposed to Aussie blues and roots during a study abroad and found an affinity for the soul-spilling tribal heartbeat of Oz music culture.

He delved further down under on a post-grad return, and started experimenting with infusions of roots soul into the finger-picking and classical styles acquired in college, and the years of rearranging cover tunes to suit the mood of the room.

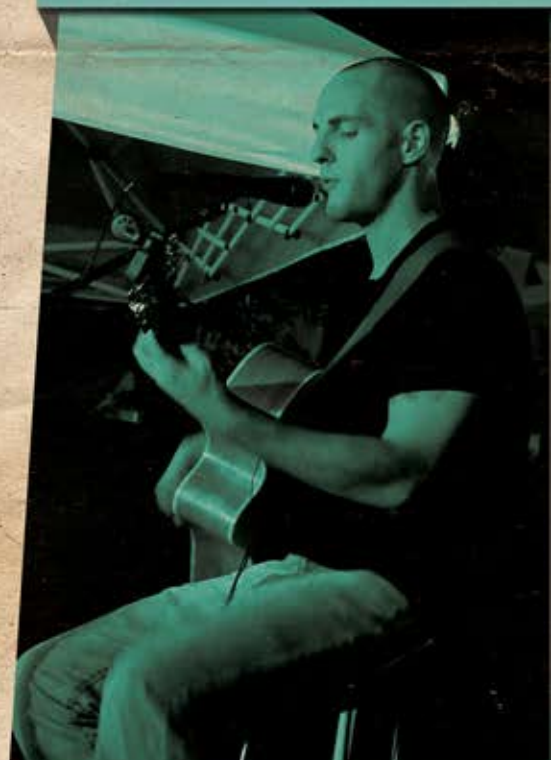

Sukits' live show today is the direct manifestation of this peculiar path, almost taking on a range and feel that summons whatever the space is calling to create. He'll bust out a solid set of bluesy, funky foot-stomping originals just as readily as a customized night of songs you know by heart.

From rock and roll classics and pop sing-alongs to poignant ballads and laid-back beach tunes, Sukits is just as accommodating to setting the right ambiance as to striking up improvised jams and chants with the audience.

Whatever the gathering, Sukits shapes a vibe to the energy, always striving to create an interactive performance, whether he's the center of attention or merely a faint sound in the room.

Available as a solo act, duo or trio, we can learn most requests within a week.
